facts about aerosols

Since 1978, U.S. regulations have banned the use of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) in aerosols. Today, most aerosol products, including 98 percent of those made and sold in the U.S., do not contain CFCs.

Aerosol products do emit some Volatile Organic Compounds (VOCs). This is in part from the propellants used, but also from solvents and other components in the product itself. Preliminary estimates indicate that of all man-made VOCs emitted each year, consumer products account for approximately 2 to 4 percent.

The portion in aerosol containers account for only a fraction of that figure, and are largely composed of the least reactive VOCs. In fact, the vast majority of VOCs result from car and truck emissions.

Eliminating all aerosols as a way to reduce VOC emissions would wipe out valuable consumer products and a well-developed industry in exchange for essentially no improvement in air quality. In addition, many products in non-aerosol forms such as liquids and pump sprays often require more solvents to be effective, thus resulting in higher VOC emissions than aerosols.

safety and recyclability

Empty aerosol containers are as recyclable as other steel cans. Almost 90 percent of aerosol containers are made primarily of steel with a thin coating of tin. The tin is recovered during processing and plastic components are burned during reheating. In today's large-scale recycling facilities, any propellant or product left in cans presents no hazard.

NOTE: Aerosols are hermetically sealed so that their contents cannot leak or spill. They are tamper-resistant, tamper-evident and provide controlled, water-conserving, high-quality performance. There is no potential for under or over-diluted concentrates that cause poor cleaning results. Aerosols eliminate the mixing of improper products that could cause damage. The aerosol container is designed to deliver the right amount of product exactly where it's needed.

TIP: Use every last bit of the product to get the full benefit and value from the can. Just make sure the can is completely empty before you recycle it. Every effort you take goes a long way to help our planet.

- These cans are made of recyclable steel, the world's most recycled material.
- Our cans are made with 25% to 32% recycled steel depending on can style.
- The caps and spray tips are recyclable.
- Our shipping box utilizes 37% recycled material.
- Fact...65% Of steel containers are recycled versus 6% for plastic containers.
